

Friday Just After Memorial Day

Here we are sitting here the post Memorial Day weekend coming on. We are waiting for the Covid virus to pass. We have a cure for it and vaccination is in the loop. I know we have processes but these processes were not created in the vacuum of a pandemic. I saw us take short cuts through the Ebola vaccine development process. It was three months from start to finish or something real short. I believe that these things take time. I am a white person who served in the army with all different races. Some of the best times was out in this mixed crowd. Here we are again, some police man over stepping the boundaries of his office and now we are seeing another American city being burned. I believe that protesting is a god given right but as soon as you start destroying property the protest is over and a crime has started.

I feel sad for the gentleman that lost his life but in this time of Covid 19... I wonder how many of these protesters just voted themselves a dose of the corona virus. Because I know they were crowded together running around. Unintended Consequences usually occurs when you get out there and you do not think things through. One of the reasons why I got over weight was the late night drinking of coffee with cream and sugar. Also all those days of drinking coke's with the burgers and fries while on the road did not help. I am just hoping that those folks protesting did not sign their death notice. Meanwhile I need to build a biz and write for a living.